

Attn fcc:

when travelling last week, i tuned to xm when approaching baltimore to find out there were delays at the tunnel and to go an alternate route. this saved me time, and it saved the road from becoming clogged.

would i have known what LOCAL station to turn to to get the traffic updates? is there even such a thing as 24 hour traffic update channels in large cities in the US? I don't think so.

XM's new local traffic and weather services are incredibly innovative, and don't do a thing to diminish the local stations. I'm sure locals who know the roads and schedules and stations will still tune in to those.

this is a good use of the public airwaves, ask me - I'm a member of the public!

sincerely,

Ari Kissiloff.
